

Article

The benefits of teamwork

How working in teams is good for business.

Teamwork involves different people and different groups across a business. In a team, everybody works together to maximize their efficiency and reach a common goal. There can be many different goals, for example, developing a new product, writing a long document, creating a marketing plan, developing a new strategy, and solving a problem. Teamwork is efficient because it relies on complementary strengths. It also makes employees feel that they belong to the company, and this helps them take pride in their work and their company. Working in teams also helps employees build strong relationships, and they learn to work together when they disagree. Some companies use teamwork to build a creative work environment. In these companies, staff can choose to work on projects which match their skills and interests best. Leaders are appointed for each team, and there's no chain of command.

